Harrison College's School of Business provides the training and experience students need to launch a successful career.

Since its founding as Indiana Business College in 1902, Harrison has worked every day to provide a supportive and empowering environment where students, like you, can feel confident in your education when entering the business field.

Harrison's associate of applied science in Business program provides you with an extensive business background while focusing on principles of management. We challenge you to learn about yourself, your preferences, strengths and work ethic while learning to use those traits to be a better businessperson.

Through our associate degree program, you will have the opportunity to focus on one of the following concentrations: finance, human resources, marketing, project management or office technology.

As a student of the Business program, you will be taught:

- Theory and application related to business
- Data analysis, quantitative reasoning and scientific interpretation
- Analytical skills needed to plan, implement, monitor and evaluate the status of a project
- Problem solving, critical thinking and creative thinking
